Research

Monitoring, evaluation, and research are focus areas for CVT. In direct services programs (both within the United States and internationally), CVT measures change in clients' mental health symptoms and adaptive social functioning, that is the trajectory of recovery after extreme psychological and physical traumas to independent functioning in the world. Evaluation and research staff serve as subject matter experts on evaluation and provide internal evaluation through CVTs capacity development projects which build the strength of individuals, organizations, and networks that provide services to torture survivors and are engaged in defending human rights and ending torture around the world.
